NORTH South University conducted its undergraduate admission test for the spring 2026 semester in Dhaka on Saturday.

More than seven thousand candidates appeared for the exam, aiming for admission into the school of health and life sciences, school of engineering and physical sciences, school of humanities and social sciences and school of business and economics of the university, said a press release.

Following a visit to the examination halls, NSU vice-chancellor Professor Abdul Hannan Chowdhury addressed the gathered parents and guardians. He said, 'Thank you for trusting us and choosing North South University for your next generation's higher education. NSU is among the leading institutions in the country, offering world-class facilities.'

He added, 'Through our innovative and experiential academic programs, we strive to prepare students for professional success and to contribute meaningfully to national development. I am confident that our incoming students will uphold and further strengthen NSU's proud legacy of excellence.'

Nurul Kabir, director of the undergraduate admissions office of NSU, said, 'NSU's admission test is highly competitive. As a result, some applicants will earn the opportunity to enrol, while many others will not. Those who are not successful this time will have the opportunity to apply for admission to NSU again in the next semester.'
